Europe's biggest MTB-Series for the youth and children in Niederdorf

Early to exercise: those who would later hope to take part such as the adults in the hardest Mountain bike Race in the World, the Dolomiti Superbike have today unpacked a bike. Today, 342 children and youth were present at the start. The race operates as the Scott Junior Trophy 2010, an extremely popular, European Mountain Bike Series, sponsored by Milka.

At the start today, children and young people aged three to 15 years circuited the courses between one to eight kilometres. As always, two-wheel cycles of every type were admitted. The young talents came in 12 classes and pedalled in true race form. Cheered on by a jubilant crowd came the biggest as well as the smallest racers towards their goal and were rewarded with great prizes. The strongest category was represented by the seven to eight year olds with a total of 67 participants. Amongst the very young ranging from three and four years were 24 boys and 13 girls. Important of course are the fans on the edge of the track accompanying and cheering the bikers of tomorrow.

The Scott Junior Trophy powered by Milka is already an international biking institution and Niederdorf is very excited to be one of two chosen venues in Italy. "We are quite sure some of the young talent in a few years will be at the start of the Südtirol Dolomiti Superbike", said the Vice-President of the Organizing Committee, Karl Egarter, who coordinates the "children's race". But on Sunday we must deal with one of the hardest routes in general, "tomorrow there is 119.9 kilometres through the bizarre landscape of the Dolomites at 3822 m above sea level or alternatively the 56.9 km at 1 688m altitude.
